100 Autos for Crippled Heroes

AT LEAST six hundred of the wounded men in New York army hospitals will be permitted to view the parade of the triumphant 27th Division from comfortable seats in automobiles because of the generosity of W. J. Ehreit, of 141 West Seventy-fourth Street.

After reading in The Tribune of the attitude of the city's aldermen who, having between forty and fifty tickets each allotted to them, suggested that "two or three" be given to the wounded men, Mr. Ehreit decided to take action in their behalf himself. He wrote a letter to The Tribune in which he offered to obtain at least one hundred machines from members of the New York Stock Exchange, to be used by the wounded men on March 25.

Mr. Ehreit's suggestion was that the wounded men be permitted to ride in the parade. Since they are not members of the 27th Division, it is probable that the machines, like the Fifth Avenue 'buses that are be used for wounded men, will be parked at street intersections. offering the convalescent soldiers the best view of the parade, and transportation to and from the hospitals in which they are housed.

Like his friend and contemporary, the late William Merritt Chase, Mr. Cox played a familiar part in the lives of the hundreds of art students who year by year throng to New York. MURPHY, Eugene, 901 Eighth Avenue, which founded the Society of American Artists. Devoting much time to instruction in the Art Sudents' League, he was yet so productive that public buildings throughout the country bear testimony to his preëminence as a mural decorator—the form of art on which his fame will chiefly rest.

The Library of Congress, the State House in Des Moines, the Essex County Courthouse in Newark, the Citizens' Bank and Federal buildings in Cleveland, and Bowdoin College buildings are a few structures which show typical specimens of his work.

Meanwhile Mr. Cox devoted much time to writing. When in 1909 he was awarded the medal of honor for mural painting by the Architectural League, he had already been for six years a member of the National Academy of Design and had written "Mixed Beasts," "Old Masters and New," and "Painters and Sculptors." The Classic Point of View" appeared in 1911
